

The Logan airport offers wireless service for a fee. Since the airport itself offers the service, wireless networking clearly does not pose a safety hazard.

Continental offers wireless access to its President's Club members as a competitive differentiator. Removing Continental's offering clearly violates anti-trust regulations. Competition is essential to the American way of life. The airport should not be allowed to use its monopoly position to adversely affect Continental's competitive advantage.